

Monthly Commentary

We moved our office in a warm spring afternoon. It is a new beginning for CHP, leaving the ancient temple and settling down in the art district that is known as "Hutong 798."

Our new activity room next to the office will be open to the public. We will hold lectures, seminars, and documentary screenings. We hope that we can make ourselves accessible and available to even more people from now on. Please support us by becoming volunteers, donating funds and other materials. We truly appreciate your help and concern in cultural heritage protection.

On the evening of March 12, we will have a house-warming party. Please mark your calendar and stay tuned for more details on our website www.bjchp.org.

Our new address is:

Room 309, Building E, No.46, Fangjia Hutong, Andingmennei Dajie,
Dongcheng District, Beijing,
P.R. China 100007

It is across the street from where we were, Xilou Hutong on Yonghegong Dajie. It takes about 10 minute to walk from the entrance of the hutong.

Photo Report

On the evening of Feb. 19, we screened the documentaries "Rescuing Jiaohe" and "An Introduction to Beijing Courtyard Renovation Process." The two documentaries show method and skills used in renovating traditional buildings. It was also the premiere of "An Introduction to Beijing Courtyard Renovation Process," a CHP production.

On Feb. 21, Mr. Wang Lanshun from Beijing City Archive gave a lecture on "Zongbu Hutong in Dongcheng District." Anecdotes and history of the area brought the hutong into life.

《Yong©He》

Zhang Anding

In the words of the musician, this record is like a "private city sound map." Through collecting scattered sounds of life that have been muffled by cars, he restored the real Beijing, especially the friendly Yonghegong (Lama Temple) area that evokes your emotions. Online listening

CHP Heritage Update Readers' Survey

Heritage Update has received much attention and recognition since its first publication two years ago. The results of this survey will help us improve the Update. We aim to make the Update a platform for promoting cultural heritage preservation, and a channel for CHP and the public's communication.
